

Contributors to this issue

Chen Gang is a lecturer at the School of Foreign Studies, Anhui University. He has a PhD in linguistics and applied linguistics from Zhejiang University. His research area is syntax, semantics and linguistic typology. Email: kobechen2003@sina.com

Herbert Mushangwe was born in Zimbabwe. He has a MA in Linguistics and Applied Linguistics from Tianjin Normal University. He is a teacher at the Confucius Institute at the University of Zimbabwe and a PhD student at Hebei University. His research area is a comparison of Chinese and Shona vocabulary, Chinese phonetics, and vocabulary teaching in a second language. Email: htsungy@yahoo.co.uk

Gao Shunquan is a Professor at the International Cultural Exchange School, Fudan University. He has a PhD in Chinese Linguistics from Fudan University, P. R. China. The focus of his research is grammar of modern Chinese language, acquisition of Chinese as a second language and international education of Chinese language. Email: gaoshunquan@fudan.edu.cn

Yun Xiao is Professor of Chinese language and linguistics and Chair of the Department of Modern Languages at Bryant University. She received her PhD in Linguistics from University of Hawaii in 1998. Her research interests are second language acquisition and pedagogy, heritage language learning, and Chinese syntax and discourse. She has published more than twenty journal articles and book chapters. She also published a four-volume Readings in Chinese Literature Series (2008–2010, with Hui Xiao, et al.) and three co-edited/authored research volumes: Chinese as a Heritage Language: Fostering Rooted World Citizenry (2008, with Agnes Weiyun He), Teaching Chinese as a Foreign Language: Theories and Applications (2011, 2nd edition, with Michael Everson), and Current Issues in Chinese Linguistics (2011, with Liang Tao and Hooi Ling soh). Email: yxiao@bryant.edu

Yi Xu is Assistant Professor in Chinese Language and Linguistics at the University of Pittsburgh. She received her PhD degree in Second Language Acquisition and Teaching from the University of Arizona in 2009. Her recent works include relative clause processing, character learning, and using corpus linguistic approaches in Chinese as a foreign language research. Her publications have appeared as journal articles and book chapters. Email: xuyi@pitt.edu

Chunsheng Yang is an Assistant Professor of Chinese at University of Connecticut. He earned his PhD in Chinese linguistics from The Ohio State University. His research focuses on the acquisition of second language phonology, especially the acquisition of L2 prosody, computer-assisted and mobile-assisted language teaching and learning, and Chinese linguistics and Chinese pedagogy in general.

Email: ycsgeorge@gmail.com